FUVAHMULAH ISLAND

Historical Monuments

Relics of Buddhism and indigenous culture which receded Islam in Maldives can still be seen in the 'hidden interior' of the island. Visiting archeologists and explorers have been fascinated by these relics such as Havi'tha, an old Buddhist stupa. Old mosques such as the Gen Miskiy and Kedeyre Miskiy will pique the interest of any history fan, while ancient public baths, known as veu, stand as monuments to the past glory of the island.

FUVAHMULAH ISLAND

Dive Attractions

Fuvahmulah's unique topography – its submerged reef extending deep towards the ocean – as well as its isolated location makes it one of the best diving destinations in the world. Trevallies, barracudas, and large schools of other fish glide with the continuous ocean drifts while smaller fish graze on the reef flats, creating the vision of a field of rainbow hued butterflies.

The surrounding outer atoll currents bring in magnificent pelagic creatures – bizarre-looking thresher sharks, large numbers of tiger sharks, silver tips, grey reefs, the occasional hammerheads, as well as gigantic whale sharks – to feed on the island's healthy reef ecosystem. Oceanic manta rays use the reef for cleaning and mating, most commonly around March to May every year. The oceanic temperatures remain warm throughout the year – usually at twenty seven degrees Celsius.
